21 DEAD AND FOUR MISSING IN FLOODS IN NEW YORK STATE

ITALO-ABYSSINIAN DEADLOCK

Squads of New York police continue their search for Jackie Kaul, aged 5, who, his parents believe, was kidnapped from their Sutton Place home. This photograph shows Mrs. George Kaul and Jackie, at the age of 3, as they enjoyed happy days at the seashore, before mystery shadowed their lives.

ARBITRATION NOW JEOPARDISED

CONFIRMATION OF U.S. REJECTION OF PLEA

QUESTIONS IN COMMONS

London, To-day.

The insistent curiosity of the members of the House of Commons about Mr. Anthony Eden's proposal to Signor Mussolini to cede British territory to Abyssinia accounted for a large number of questions yesterday.

At the outset an unsuccessful effort was made to draw Sir Samuel Hoare with regard to what he will say at next Thursday's debate on the Italian demand, but he informed Lt. Colonel G. J. Acland-Troyte (C. Tiverton) that one condition which accompanied the proposal was that Abyssinia should guarantee not to use the ceded territory in any way for the slave traffic.

Light on the extent of the British authority in Somaliland was next sought by Sir Arnold Wilson (C. Hitchin), to which Mr. Malcolm MacDonald, Minister for the Colonies, replied that it was not British territory but a protectorate. His Majesty did not possess full sovereignty there, but had exercised for many years full powers of administration and jurisdiction by usage as well as by the treaty of 1884. These powers were now exercised under the Somaliland Order-in-Council, 1929. The tribes would have been consulted with a view to the transference of the necessary rights had Signor Mussolini accepted Mr. Eden's suggestion.

COTTAGE SWEEPED INTO LAKE AT GENEVA

WOODSTOCK DAM BURSTS: BRIDGES SWEEPED AWAY

DELAWARE OVERFLOWS ITS BANKS

Albany, To-day.

Highways have been flooded to a depth of four to six feet, bridges and dams broken, houses destroyed and crops ruined in disastrous floods following torrential rains in New York State. The damage is estimated at $2,000,000.

A man was killed by lightning and four were drowned by a bridge collapse at Ithaca. Two people were drowned when a motor-car was swept off the highway by the flood.

Fifty families narrowly escaped when the dam burst at Woodstock, and only avoided the torrents by climbing a 40-foot high cliff. Seventy-five people were marooned in motor-cars and omnibuses.

Both gas and electricity were cut off at Hornell, where the police stations, fire stations and Salvation Army building are packed with refugees. The villages in the Mohawk Valley are submerged under floods 10-12 feet deep.

European chancelleries attach of significance to the visit of General Hermann Goerring, German Air Minister, to King Boris in Sofia, where he showed him one of the Reich's latest fighting planes. Bulgaria was Germany's ally in the late war.

MILITARY PARLEYS IN CANTON

Divisional Commanders Summoned

CANTON DEFENCES TO BE STRENGTHENED

[From Our Own Correspondent]

Canton, To-day.

Another military conference of divisional and army commanders will be held here next Monday for the purpose of discussing the military defence of Kwangtung. General Li Yang-king, G.O.C. of the third army, and General Yu Han-mow, G.O.C. of the First army, will return here from Swatow and Tayu, Southern Kiangsi, respectively, for the parley.

Why such a conference is called now and against whom precautions are to be taken has not been announced. The usual explanation is that another Great War is coming and that Canton should not be caught napping.

The escape of the cruisers Hai Chi and Hai Shen from Whampoa and the failure of the Bocca Tigris forts to prevent them from fleeing have awakened the military authorities to the necessity of better guns at the forts and more efficient gunners to man the batteries. If an attacking squadron can get by Bocca Tigris, Canton will be at its mercy.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON AND AFRIKA INVOLVED

The sequel to the collision between the 14,000 ton American Mail liner, s.s. President Jefferson, and the East Asiatic Co.'s motor vessel, Afrika, near the Kowloon Wharf on Saturday, December 14, 1934, was the claim and counter-claim for damages by the owners of both vessels, which were brought into open court this morning before His Honour the Chief Justice, Sir Atholl MacGregor, and the Harbour Master, Comdr. G. F. Hole, in the Supreme Court, after a lengthy hearing in chambers.

Mr. F. C. Jenkin, K.C., instructed by Mr. D. H. Blake of Messrs. Wilkinson & Grist, appeared for the American Mail Line, while Mr. Eldon Potter, K.C. and Mr. H. C. Macnamara, instructed by Mr. O. E. C. Marton, of Messrs. Deacons, represented the East Asiatic Co.

In opening, Mr. Jenkin said that the collision had taken place just before noon on Saturday, December 14. The President Jefferson had a gross tonnage of over 14,000.

Paris, To-day.

The Spanish Government, according to the newspapers here, have ordered from the British arms makers Vickers Armstrong, 167 machine-guns for fighting planes, 107 Paris machine-guns, and 52 machine-gun towers for heavy bombing and naval aeroplanes. — Trans-Ocean Service.

The status of British Somaliland was the same as that of Uganda and Kenya, but Kenyans were British subjects while Somalilanders did not enjoy in the Empire all the rights and privileges of a Briton. They had to register with the police as aliens on entering Britain unless they were individually exempted.

ITALIAN PROTEST

A later message from Scheveningen states that the Italo-Abyssinian Commission will to-day decide whether it is worth while to continue their hearings in view of the protest of the Italian members against the declaration of the spokesman for Ethiopia, Professor Jeze, that Ual Ual is in Abyssinian territory.

The Italian members contended that the Commission was only empowered to consider the causes of the incidents, not the delimitation of the frontier, and refused to hear further evidence from Professor Jeze. — Reuter.

STOP PRESS

Four men were injured in the early hours of this morning, when an explosion occurred aboard the s.s. Nagisa Maru, which was berthed at Buoy A 11 in the harbour.

It appears that two coolies, Chan Han, aged 45, and Leung Tak, aged 40, went down into No. 5 hold, which contained a cargo of coal to smoke opium, and this was responsible for the explosion. Another coolie, Li Hop, aged 30, standing at the top of the hold, was burned, and a Japanese sailor, F. Shimogawa, was also injured.

Three Chinese were taken to the Kowloon Hospital, two being in a very serious condition, while the Japanese was taken to the Hara Hospital, a private Japanese establishment.

London, To-day.

In the course of a leading article on the silver question the Financial Times says that private cables from the United States intimate the expectation that while not refusing to buy more silver, the United States would no longer press its purchases.

Decorative Belts Of Coloured Beads Brighten Black Afternoon And Evening Gowns

A FEW HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

When Washing Silk

Two tablespoons of vinegar added to the last water in which silk garments, especially hose, are rinsed, will restore the new feeling.

Shine On Blue Serge

Blue serge clothing can be kept from becoming shiny by sponging it with equal parts of vinegar and water, and pressing with a cloth wrung out of the same solution. This will also remove the shine from old serge.

Baby's Bottle

The nipple on a baby's bottle will never collapse while the baby is nursing if a three- or four-inch piece of thread is put over the opening of the bottle.

Grease Spots On Silk

Talcum powder sprinkled on a fresh grease spot on your silk dress, left for a short time and then brushed off, would practically remove this spot. Talcum will not remove a grease spot of long standing.

Privacy Screens

Screens painted with aluminum paint give absolute privacy, even though the window is wide open.

OLD FASHIONED GOLF CAPE

Afternoon Ensembles Of Printed Crepe

The old-fashioned golf cape has been revived and sponsors a long, plain, circular cape in place of the swaggar coat, worn with a cotton frock. For example, there is a long navy blue woollen cape which is worn with a frock of light blue pique. There are also afternoon ensembles which consist of a frock of printed crepe and a long cape of a plain colour in the same material and, vice versa, a plain material with a cape of the printed material. Several all-black afternoon frocks are worn with a three-quarter length cape of the same material lined with a print.

London. Despite the wave of grey colours for evening wear this summer season, black is being used to a marked degree. Elegance with a superlative slim line is brought to black satin gowns, some of which have a one-sided flat front wrap-over skirt swathe. No colour mars its short trained length. It has an ingenious trimming that breaks right away from the ordinary. Four tassels...two posed at either side of a square front decollete, and two at either side of a V-pointed back. All four swathe at fin depth on a flat tailored surface. From a rounded decollete a thick black cord, of Dominican persuasion in dimension, but of black silk, falls to a high waist-line.

A gown in silver lame has an unusually high waistline, with a corsage of organdie. This short top is enhanced by semicircular frills that seem to roll round and round the upper arm. Chiffon is tailored in plain colours, such as white and lacquer red. Both show back and front V-decolletes surrounded by an ostrich feather fringe in identical colouring. Colophoned lace is used in black, navy, and dark red. These gowns also have a meticulously tailored air, even when frills prevail, as they do at knee length above a slightly gauged foundation covered with frills. Capelets of short frills usually accompany these

ENGLISH LINENS

Fabrics That Paris Favours

TAILORED SUITS

Paris. There is a decided trend in favour of classic tailor-made suits in Paris. The weather has made them more conspicuous. These essentially English styles are deemed more becoming than ever amidst the great variety of dressmakers' coat and jacket ensembles.

Youth is cultivating the tailored suit in grey woollen or flannel as well as navy blue, with a red cravat silk blouse that matches one or two pom-poms set on top of the new beret called "Gondolier." Young girls in grey suits are now going about without stockings and wearing flat-heeled shoes of sporting calibre in white with leather strappings to match dark coloured blouses.

The new English linens have taken Paris by storm. Apart from these linens being tailored to perfection, they are a foil to patterned prints and summer raiment of flimsy character. Royal blue provides a contrast for other coloured linen frocks with striped corsages in chemisier styles beneath neat white pique tailored jackets. These jackets usually show a flat motif of the coloured linen running like a hem down the outside of long front revers.

A dress of similar cut made from coarse mesh red linen, with a single centre front button fastening to the waist, carries the striped effect into a half-length slack coat.

shoulder to the other above a low back decollete, set off by a flower. A huge pink poppy is one choice. Mittens of lace looked just as enchanting with these gowns as those made of satin or taffeta with corresponding evening gowns.

Colour Contrast

For a contrast on black, multi-coloured beads are used. Circling a slim waist is a perfect creation that tapers to a fine point in front from a flat dropped swathe at the back.

These colours reflect the Far East trend that has also influenced head draperies that can be manipulated on summer nights. This designer drapes a full-length cowl at the back of a black satin gown, with a belt that looks as though it were made of mermaid skin faceted in tones of iridescent greens. A ground-length cape enhances the front belted tailored line or black crinkly crepe.

When the same designer comes further West for inspiration she makes a superb evening gown of Grecian trend in mastic grey-chiffon with a high-waisted decollete crossed from one shoulder to the other, back and front. A wide stencilled pink floral band sways at the hem-line, and the ensemble is completed by a half-length coat of exquisite lame. This is of Persian design in grey, with indefinite designs of flowers and animals running through the weave.

The harem trousered line which Alix shows does not appeal so much. It is liable to get bedraggled in summer night dust, trailing in pleated folds round about the ankles. This bespattering with dust seems a pity to me when it happens to the flowing skirt-line of a white chiffon gown which has a three-panelled trained length at the back, with yellow daffodils spraying up on each at about a foot from the ground.

BLACK SUEDE HAND BAGS

Lustre Restored With Olive Oil And Ink

Black suede handbags soon acquire a soiled, dusty appearance if used regularly, and although fine glasspaper is excellent for removing grease-marks it is not so good for freshening the surface of the suede. A rather drastic but successful treatment for a shabby black suede bag is to sponge it sparingly with a little olive oil and black ink. Use equal quantities and mix them in a saucer. This application will restore the deep black lustre of the suede with little trouble.

SURPRISE OF THE SEASON

All Black Frocks For Day And Evening

London.

A surprise of the season is the number of all-black frocks which are being shown for both day and evening wear. Black georgette, which has been ignored for several seasons, has again come to the fore for day-time frocks and black organdie, organza, net, tulle and taffeta are favourites for the evening. The dead black of these evening gowns is usually relieved by a cluster of flowers. A huge bunch of calla lilies, sprays of mauve wisteria, clusters of pale pink and blue hydrangeas, and a nose-gay of bright red camellias, are among the favourite decorations. Red camellias, by the way, are very much in vogue for both day and evening wear.

LARGER FLOWERS

Latest Summer Patterns In Vivid Colours

The flower craze is growing in more ways than one. Fashion, which thought meekly in violets, anemones, rosebuds and the comparatively modest-sized camellia, has suddenly turned to planting sunflower and gigantic poppy. The latest patterns for summer wear introduce such blooms as these in large size and vivid colour. Flowers are cut out from these bold prints and cleverly wired up to introduce novel collarette and peplum lines.

SILVA RECOVERS WELL AGAINST A. R. DALLAH

Almost uncanny Consistency

INDIAN SKIP NEARING CHAMPIONSHIP CLASS

(By "SKIP")
Playing brilliant bowls, with almost uncanny consistency, C. G. Silva, the Recife skip, beat A. R. Dallah, of the Indian R.C., by 4 shots after the latter had snatched the lead from him on the 14th head.

Dallah deserves full credit for the magnificent front he showed, and few bowlers would have beaten him on yesterday's showing. He made some fine attempts at driving when the situation was very near to hopeless, and on many occasions, when they proved abortive, it was due more to the luck of the game, rather than to his lack of skill.

What must have been some of the closest heads in the competition thus far were witnessed yesterday, for it was seldom indeed that either player had not a wood to within a foot of the jack. Notwithstanding the heavy rains of the past week the green was in good condition and the woods were bending beautifully on both hands at each end.

Apparently working on the assumption that it would be on the heavy side, Silva was inclined to be too heavy in his deliveries, and did not overcome this difficulty even when the game was well under way, for any stray wood he delivered invariably stopped behind the jack.

Dallah's chief attribute was his ability to play both long and short heads well, while Silva, on the other hand, did not appear to be so comfortable on the short heads favoured by Dallah when he had the jack.

With a little more experience Dallah should turn out one of the finest bowlers in the Colony, for even now he is not far off championship class.

Phillips And Wenstob May Meet For Empire Boxing Title

London, June 7.—A request has been made to the British Boxing Board of Control by the Wembley authorities to sanction the forthcoming fight between Eddie Wenstob, the former Canadian ranch worker, and Eddie Phillips as for the British Empire light-heavy-weight championship.

The fight is the chief preliminary on the night of June 25, when Jack Peterson and Walter Neusel have their return contest. Phillips is British champion as light-heavy-weight, but Wenstob holds no title. On the form he has shown, however, he should be a good match for Phillips.

In any event the fight will be a Twickenham last season.

BRADDOCK WINS REFUSES TO SHAKE HANDS BEFORE BOUT

Menacing Attitude Towards Baer
"WILL DO ALL MY TALKING IN THE RING"

The title fight between Baer and Braddock last month was almost staged as an impromptu affair when the two rivals met for the weighing-in ceremony in the afternoon.

The trouble started when Baer, with a broad grin on his face, approached Braddock. "How are you feeling, Jimmy?" he asked, at the same time extending his hand. Braddock brushed the hand aside and replied:

"I don't want to talk to you. I'll do all my talking in the ring."
Baer stood nonplussed by this snub. Then Braddock's diminutive manager, Joe Gould, stepped up to Baer and pushed him away.

British Fighters Want To Meet Braddock

HARVEY ON HIS CHANCE

Jack Petersen, the British heavy-weight champion, and Len Harvey have lost no time in expressing their desires to meet Braddock for the world's title.

When training for his fight at Wembley with Walter Neusel (to whom he lost badly!) Petersen said:
"I would be only too pleased to meet Braddock. After my fight with Neusel the new world champion can have a match either in America or in England."

Enthusiastic Harvey

Harvey is even more enthusiastic, declaring: "I think I can beat Braddock. He is only a stones heavier than I, and I gave away over two stones when I drew with Neusel."

"I saw Braddock during my last trip to the States, and I am convinced I am a better fighter than he," added Harvey. "I have always given away weight since becoming a cruiser-weight, and Braddock would be no greater opposition than Petersen, whom I beat. The weight question does not worry me."

"I am in perfect condition, and when a reply arrives from the States I am ready to discuss terms immediately."

PRESTON'S COMEBACK

RUGBY LEAGUE SNAPS UP WELSH INTERNATIONAL

Edgar Jones, the Wales and Lanelli R.F.C. forward, was yesterday signed on by the Leeds Rugby League Club. Jones, who has played against England, Scotland, and Ireland in 1933, was in the match against England at Twickenham last season.

"Tiger" was imported from Hartford, Connecticut, when Joe ran out of sparring partners. After a minute of sparring he stepped into one of Louis's lefts and subsequently lost interest in the proceedings. Joe beat Primo Carners in his Milk Fund bout at the Yankee Stadium on June 25 last.

Miss Wethered Sets Up Unofficial Golf Record

Pennsylvania.—Miss Joyce Wethered, recently broke the Philadelphia Country Club's women's course record. She returned a 73, six strokes better than the record established by Mrs. Clemmie Collett Vars some time ago. The record, however, is unofficial, as several putts were conceded.

A gallery 1,000 strong saw the match in perfect weather. They were roused to a high pitch of enthusiasm by Miss Wethered's wizardry. The English player, for the first time during her tour, was deadly with her putter. She had a 25-footer at the sixth.

At the fourth Miss Wethered played her approach shot from 95 yards within half an inch of the cup. Her magnificent "iron" play was also a feature.

GERMAN RIVAL'S NET ATTACK SUCCEEDS

STARTLING COLLAPSE OF McGRATH

HENKEL DEVASTATING OVERHEAD

Berlin, June 15.
GERMANY struck a heavy blow to Australia's hopes of winning the Davis Cup when she captured the first two singles matches here to-day in their European Zone semi-final, which was begun at the Red-White Club.

The large crowd went almost delirious with excitement; they cheered wildly when Baron Gottfried von Cramm, Germany's No. 1 player, defeated J. H. Crawford, Australia's champion, in straight sets, and they again showed wild enthusiasm when H. Henkel sprang another surprise by defeating Vivian McGrath by three sets to one.

Von Cramm's win over Crawford is a repetition of his victory in the French championships last year. He should beat McGrath and thus give Germany victory.

A huge crowd, which included Sir Eric Phipps, the British Ambassador, watched von Cramm give a masterly display. In spite of the intense heat he showed amazing agility and endurance, whereas Crawford obviously could not get acclimatized and was not his usual self. Von Cramm successfully stormed the net, and also put over many useful lobs; Crawford tried in vain to keep his opponent from the net and get him on the run with long, sweeping drives to the corners. But von Cramm played an inspired game and countered every move.

The German took a 4-0 lead in the third set when Crawford appeared very tired. These reverses, however, stung the Australian to greater efforts and he won the next game and broke through von Cramm's service for 2-4.

Crawford continued to fight desperately to the end, but von Cramm won the last two games, which contained some splendid rallies at the net and provided the best play of the match.

6,000 MILES TO SEE SON IN TEST

THEN HAS TO GO HOME

Nottingham, June 15.
A South African cricket enthusiast travelled 6,000 miles for the first Test match against England and in which his son was almost certain to play. Yet he did not see the game.

He was the father of A. B. C. Langton, and he was so delighted when the young Transvaal bowler was included in the side to visit England that he decided to take Mr. Langton over and follow the tour. But on the eve of what would have been his son's first Test match, Mr. Langton was called home by urgent cable.

Langton, who is plainly disappointed, said that the season of sugar crushing on the plantations had started earlier than was anticipated, and his father's superintendence was needed.

Newcastle United lost £1,508 last season, gate receipts dropping from £36,511 the previous year to £34,978.

NEW YORK STOCK MARKET

Stocks: Steady buying of industrial issues, on good trade prospects, seems curious when contrasted with the relatively poor action of railroad stocks. Unless the latter issues improve importantly soon, traders might as well accept some profits elsewhere. Our view of the longer range outlook still favours bullish positions. Business done: 1,310,000 shares.

Grains: Reports now indicate that rust fungus is penetrating wheat heads in South Dakota. We would buy on all setbacks. Total sales: Wheat: 33,146,000 bushels. Corn: 3,392,000 bushels.

Cotton: Weather conditions are perfect. There was some covering by short interests and also some local buying in sympathy with the strength of securities and wheat.

Rubber: Actual rubber is well held, whilst tyre sales are good. Conditions warrant an accumulation of holdings. Total sales: 150 lots.

Flash: The Government estimates cotton acreage at 29,166,000 acres.

Steel mill activity during the past week is estimated at 35.3 per cent of capacity, against 32.8 per cent the previous week.

No answer was given to Sir Arnold Wilson's request for an assurance that the treaty of 1925 ceding Jubaland without the consent of the inhabitants would not be followed.

HEARINGS DELAYED.

Scheveningen, To-day.

The deadlock persisted yesterday in the Italo-Abyssinian Conciliation Commission, which has not yet invited the Ethiopian spokesman, Professor Jeze, to continue his pleadings.

The latter was interrupted on Saturday by the Italian member's refusal to accept part of Prof. Jeze's evidence. It is understood that the hearings will be delayed until the Italians have received instructions from Rome.—Reuters.

M. AVENOL IN LONDON.

A London message states that the Abyssinian situation will be the chief topic of the conversations between Sir Samuel Hoare, Foreign Minister, and M. Avenol, Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who came to London last night from Geneva.

If the Conciliation Commission is unable to appoint an arbitrator by July 25, the matter will automatically come before the League Council.—Reuters.

SERIOUS DEADLOCK.

The Hague, To-day.

Such serious difficulties have arisen in connection with the Italo-Abyssinian arbitration committee deliberating at Scheveningen that it is considered questionable whether the work can be continued.

The deadlock is said to have been caused by certain representations made by the French attorney Professor Gaston Jeze, representing the Abyssinian Government.

According to the Italian delegates Professor Jeze evoked certain facts which the committee is not empowered to discuss. Consequently Professor Jeze's pleadings had to be interrupted at the wish of the Italian delegation so as to enable the affair to be cleared up by internal deliberation.

Numerous telephone conversations with Rome took place yesterday afternoon to obtain special instructions from the Italian Government. The outlook last night was very pessimistic.—Trans-Ocean Service.

AMERICAN REPLY.

Addis Ababa, To-day.

Confirmation of the exact terms of the United States reply to the Abyssinian note invoking the Kellogg Pact was furnished by the publication here yesterday of the text of the United States reply.

As already reported, the United States Government expresses satisfaction that the League of Nations is engaged in an endeavour to find a solution of the problem acceptable to both sides, and hopes that the Court of Arbitration will give a ruling acceptable to both Italy and Abyssinia.

As regards Abyssinia's invocation of the Kellogg Pact, the United States Government declares distinctly that it is unable to believe that any signatory of the Kellogg Pact, among whom Italy and Abyssinia and 61 other States belong, would resort to any but peaceful means to settle a dispute or would permit to arise a situation incompatible with the obligations undertaken by virtue of the pact.—Trans-Ocean Service.

QUESTIONS IN COMMONS.

London, To-day.

In the House of Commons yesterday the Foreign Secretary, Sir Samuel Hoare, was questioned regarding the stipulations made by the British Government in 1923 as a condition precedent to the withdrawal of the opposition to the French proposal, supported by Italy, for the admission of Abyssinia to membership of the League of Nations.

Sir Samuel Hoare replied that the special conditions upon which the United Kingdom, in common with other members of the League, agreed in 1923 to the admission of Abyssinia was that that country should sign a declaration undertaking, firstly, to endeavour to secure the complete suppression of slavery and of the slave trade; secondly, to abide by the rules which other countries with territories in Africa had already agreed to follow regarding the import of arms and munitions; and thirdly, to provide the Council with information when so requested and take into consideration any recommendations which the Council might make about Abyssinia's obligations.

It would be difficult, he added, on the information available to express an opinion on the efficiency of the measures taken by the Ethiopian Government in regard to slavery. These measures had recently been reviewed by the League's Committee of experts on slavery.

PROPOSED CESSION.

Further information was given at Question Time to a group of members who had been disturbed by the suggestion of a transfer of a corridor along the frontier of British Somaliland which was contained in the conditional proposal recently made to Italy by the British Government in the hope of facilitating the settlement of the Italo-Abyssinian dispute.

Sir Samuel Hoare stated that any definite proposal which His Majesty's Government might have made to cede to Abyssinia the port of Zella and a corridor of British Somaliland would have been accompanied by safeguards designed to protect the interests of the inhabitants of the territories concerned. In particular the Ethiopian Government would have been requested to give a guarantee that such territory as might be ceded would not be utilised in any way for the slave trade.

Moreover, the necessary steps would have been taken to ensure that the grazing and watering rights already possessed by the tribes under British protection would have been unaffected.

The Secretary for the Colonies, Mr. Malcolm MacDonald, said that the inhabitants of British Somaliland were British protected persons. Had circumstances arisen which required further consideration of the suggestion tentatively made by Mr. Eden, consultation would have taken place with the tribes affected with a view to the necessary rights in the area concerned, which contained 20 permanent wells and the port of Zella.

The Kellogg Pact

"They had decided on a struggle on which the Government and people would not turn back." This was the declaration of war made by Signor Mussolini at Salerno to a division of Black Shirts who have now sailed for Djibouti. His further reference to the battle of Adowa, nearly forty years ago, shows exactly where the shoe pinches; and it must be admitted that motive of re-establishing a shaken prestige is one for which history will provide many precedents. Taking the words in their natural meaning they can only mean, in spite of the fact that the arbitrators are at present taking evidence on the dispute that the started the trouble, that no finding of an Arbitral Court can be expected to give a decision that would be finally satisfactory, and that the Italian policy can only be achieved by war. What then becomes of the Kellogg Pact?

There is something peculiarly modern about the circumstances of the declaration. It was made down by an aeroplane, piloted by himself; a qualification which he shares with his two sons, Vittorio and Bruno. On the way the plane was struck by lightning, and the wireless operator got a shock; but a little thing like that was not allowed to interfere with the engagement. The Black Shirts are not regular soldiers but a militia, ready to defend the Dictator at home, and now, apparently, are to be treated as available for foreign service. Nothing could be less formal, according to old notions, than the declaration of Government to embark troops. Of course the Parliament is no more, and one must suppose that there is no council or deliberative assembly whose sensibilities had to be considered when once the decision had been arrived at by the Cabinet. It is in which the Duce himself holds most of the important portfolios. In contrast nothing could be more ancient than the motives of revenge and annexation.

That the decision is important for the post-war scheme of securing general peace needs no argument. There are many people who have comforted themselves for the failure of the League by the thought that the Kellogg Pact provided a second line of entrenchment which could be held by the threat of various sanctions to be imposed by all the signatories whether League members or not. That is to misunderstand the pact, which is not a treaty, but a declaration that a certain doctrine is no longer valid. The doctrine was formulated by Clausewitz, who was accepted by the Germans as the final authority on war. It is simply that "war is an extension of diplomacy, to attain the object of policy by other means." The Pact declares that the signatories agree that this doctrine is no longer a sufficient justification for a declaration of war. But Mr. Secretary Kellogg himself, when tackled in the usual way in Congress with the charge of "foreign entanglements," stated that the pact imposed no obligation on the United States to maintain it. The reply made by Washington to Addis Ababa, declining to intervene, is therefore quite consistent. But the situation once again raises the question which has always been in the background: What is the use of the Kellogg Pact?

If we put ourselves into the place of those who are called upon to deal with the actual situation, we see that behind that question is another: What is the use of sanctions? A sanction is a special embargo on trade or shipping intended to produce the same results as military action without involving fighting. An arms embargo could easily be enforced against Abyssinia, because that country has no fleet; but it is idle to suppose that it could be enforced against Italy without war. The result would be to substitute a big war for a little one. Not necessarily at once. The League is at present dependent on the allies of the Great War, minus the important exception of the United States, and with Japan as an enemy instead of a friend. The transference of Italy to the other side, even without war, would upset the whole equilibrium. Certainly, with such a danger so near at home, there would be no fleet available in the Far East to preserve the status quo.

Recent actions prove that there is no jealousy of Italy and her plans for expansion of territory. At Versailles the Italian diplomatists demanded a place in the sun in Asia Minor, with Alexandretta as a jumping-off place. Kemal Pasha put an end to that plan, and Italy demanded "compensation." The Tripolitan Colony has been expanded and consolidated, even though encroachments were made on the Egyptian Sudan. A boundary favourable to Tripoli was delimited. Then we granted a considerable area of Kenya Colony, France granted a share of the railway to Addis Ababa, and a bit of land that would make it not a useful to Italy. The new policy, with its probable extension by other means, is un-

HAUNTED HOUSE.

Brede Place, the ancestral home of the Frewens, in Sussex, is to be sold. It ranks among England's oldest inhabited houses. It was built, like its neighbour, Bodiam Castle, in the reign of Edward III, and has a chapel testifying to the days when it was an abbey. The house is alleged to be haunted by the ghost of its 15th century owner, Sir Goddard Oxenbridge. He was said to have been seen in two with a wooden saw, he was impervious to steel—the children of East Sussex, on one end of it and the children of West Sussex on the other. The gallows, and hook on which he hanged his own children are still shown in an attic chamber called the Gallows Room. ECLECTIC PLAY.

In the eighteenth century Brede was a smugglers' lair, approached by sunken passages. In more modern times it was lent to the American writer, Stephen Crane. A play, written jointly by Henry James, Robert Barr, George Gissing, Rider Haggard, Joseph Conrad, H. B. Marriott-Watson, Mr. H. G. Wells, Edwin Pugh, Mr. A. E. W. Mason and Stephen Crane himself, was produced in the Brede Village schoolhouse. Unfortunately this eclectic manuscript was destroyed.

Sammy was not prone to over-exercising in the classroom. Therefore, his mother was both surprised and pleased when he came home with the announcement, "I got a hundred this morning."

"That's lovely, dear," she said as she kissed the boy tenderly. "What was it in?" she asked. "Fifty in reading and fifty in spelling."

Man (to neighbor): "I wish you would sell that dog. Yesterday, my daughter had to stop her singing because your dog was whining all the time."

Neighbour: "I'm sorry, but your daughter started it."

"Honestly, would you think I bought this car secondhand?"
"No, I thought you made it your self."

The Promise

TWO CONSTITUTIONS COMPARED

SITUATION IN BRITAIN AND AMERICA

PROFOUND DIFFERENCES OF PROCEDURE

(By Rt. Hon. Winston S. Churchill)

TWO remarkable incidents have recently thrown the strong light of current events upon the political institutions of the United States and of Great Britain.

In America the Supreme Court, gave a unanimous judgment which stifles and largely paralyzes the whole vast picture of social and economic change embodied in President Roosevelt's National Recovery Act. In England a new Government with a new Prime Minister was formed.

These transactions illustrate in a revealing manner the profound differences between the Constitutions under which the two English-speaking democracies have come to dwell.

It is very difficult for us to realise the kind of deadlock which has been reached in the United States. Imagine, for instance, this gigantic India Bill, passed through Parliament and for two or three years in active operation throughout the whole of India, suddenly being declared illegal by the Law Lords sitting at a tribunal nearer home—some gigantic measure of insurance as big as the widows' pensions, health and employment insurance rolled together which had deeply interwoven itself in the whole life of the people, upon which every kind of contract and business arrangement had been based, being declared to have no validity by a court of law. We simply cannot conceive it. Yet something very like that has occurred on the other side of the Atlantic.

In our country an Act of Parliament which, upon the advice of the Ministers responsible for it, has received the Royal Assent is the law of the land. Its authority cannot be questioned by any court. There is no limit to the powers of Crown and Parliament. Even the gravest changes in our Constitution can be carried out by simple majority votes in both Houses and the consequential assent of the Crown.

Conditions in U.S.
In the United States a written Constitution is enforced by a Supreme Court according to the letter of the law. Anyone may bring a test case challenging not merely the interpretation of a law, but the law itself; and if the court decides for the appellant, he is only an owner of a few chickens, the whole action of the Legislature and the Executive becomes to that extent null and void. To modify the Constitution even in the smallest particular requires a two-thirds majority of the sovereign States forming the American Union. This has only been achieved, after prodigious struggles, on less than a score of occasions during the whole history of the United States.

The American citizens or jurists gaze with wonder at our great democracy expressing itself with plenary powers through a Government and a Parliament controlled, only by the fluctuating currents of public opinion.

Time Can Show
When we point to the inconvenience of his system, the American retorts by warning us of the precarious fluidity of ours. So far he admits all has worked out well. The good sense of the British public, the experience and training of our political classes, the respect of our unwritten Constitution and tradition have carried us through. But the imprudence of trying to conduct the whole affairs of a mighty State and Empire without any fundamental laws, without any effective second Chamber, with a constitutional Sovereign acting upon the advice of Ministers, and without the aid of any supreme court, leaves him aghast. When we speak of his present plight, he reminds us of our ever-present insecurity.

Only time can show where wisdom lies.

At the same time, we in this island are the passive spectators of an immense change in the personnel, and possibly in the character, of the whole of our executive Government. New Ministers fill the greatest offices. The head of the Government is changed. A different Cabinet met after Whitsuntide. Yet in all these changes neither Parliament nor the electorate required to be consulted in any way. Nevertheless everyone accepts this as a matter of course.

What is the explanation? It is that British Governments live from day to day only upon the approval of the House of Commons. There is no divorce between the Executive and Legislature. The Ministers, new or old, had to be chosen from men and parties which in the aggregate commanded a majority in the House of Commons when it re-assembled after the holidays.

Public Opinion Supreme
If the new Prime Minister formed a Government which offended the House of Commons, he and his colleagues could be dismissed in an afternoon, and someone else would have to try again to meet the wishes of the Assembly. If the House of Commons gave its support to a Government which the electorate did not like, this Government could be swept away after the next general election. Therefore public opinion, expressed through all its hydra-heads, is master, and all the plans of the King's new Prime Minister must be attuned to this omnipresent, dominant influence. Here is our guarantee, here is our safeguard: it is all we have; but so far it has not failed.

Parliament can, if it chooses, even prolong its own life beyond the statutory limit; Ministers may at any time advise the King to a sudden dissolution. Yet all classes and all parties have a deep, underlying conviction that these vast flexible powers will not be abused, that the spirit of our unwritten Constitution will be respected at every stage and that public chastisement would speedily overtake any Minister, however powerful, who fell below the accepted standards of fair play or who descended to trick-work or dodgery.

Certainly no one could live under the British Constitution except its inventors and patentees, and neither they nor their descendants have ever been able to explain the secret to others.

THEFT AT SUN CO.

Herr Ernst Torgler, former German Communist leader, who has been released from prison after two years' incarceration following the Reichstag fire.

ERNST TORGLER RELEASED

Imprisonment For Three Years IN CUSTODY SINCE REICHTAG FIRE

Berlin. After living in a German prison for more than two years, although declared innocent at the famous Reichstag fire trial, Herr Ernst Torgler, former Communist leader, has been released.

This fact was made known by Dr. Goebbels recently. There is no indication of Herr Torgler's present whereabouts beyond that he is "somewhere in the country outside Berlin."

It is declared that Torgler was released from the prison at Ploetzensee three weeks ago.

His release has not yet been brought to the notice of the German public, but it is understood that an official announcement will shortly be forthcoming.

One of the Communist leaders in the old Reichstag, Torgler was arrested the day after the Reichstag fire on Feb. 28, 1933, and placed on trial, together with Van der Lubbe, the Dutch Communist, and the Bulgarians Dimitroff, Popoff, and Taneff.

After the Fire Trial the trial ended on Dec. 23, 1933. Van der Lubbe was sentenced to death and subsequently executed. All the others were acquitted. As soon as the verdict was delivered, Herr Torgler and the three Bulgarians were taken into "protective custody" and removed to prison.

Dimitroff, Popoff, and Taneff were later granted Soviet citizenship, released in February, 1934, and sent to Moscow by aeroplane. Torgler has remained in prison until now.

Gen. Goering is believed to have been responsible for this long confinement, he having stated in a public court that whatever the result of the trial Torgler, as a Communist, should not escape punishment.

ARYAN PRINCIPLE IN GERMANY

Regulations Extended To Universities

NATIONAL SOCIALIST PARTY MEMBERSHIP

— CHINA MAIL — SPECIAL

Berlin, To-day.

The application of the "Aryan principle" to those wishing to study at the German universities and technical schools is regulated by new stipulations just issued by the Reich Minister for Education. These are all based on the law of April 22, 1933, concerning the formation of students' societies of which membership is compulsory.

Only those students of either sex can be admitted who belong to the German national commonwealth and are of Aryan origin, according to the principles laid down by the National Socialist Party for admission to party membership.

Until October 1, 1936, that is, during the transitional period, it will be sufficient to prove that all ancestors as far back as the grand-parents were Aryan. Where doubt arises, proof of Aryan descent back to the year 1800 may be demanded.

This is the first time that the conditions for the admission to the National Socialist Party have been extended to apply to an other month's imprisonment for breaking his bond.

Cheung Chau Notes

Cheung Chau, Yesterday. — The first English service of the season was held yesterday in the Assembly Hall, when the Rev. H. The Rev. E. S. Barker will conduct the service next Sunday, and arrangements are being made to start a Sunday School.

Several families are expected to arrive during this week, and most of the houses will be filled.

To-day's Short Story.

The Hottest Gay In The World

By Damon Runyon

I WISH to say I am very nervous indeed when Big Jule pops into my hotel room one afternoon, because anybody will tell you that Big Jule is the hottest guy in the whole world at the time I am speaking about.

In fact, it is really surprising how hot he is. They wish to see him in Pittsburgh, Pa., about a matter of a mail truck being robbed, and there is gossip about him in Minneapolis, Minn., where somebody takes a fifty G pay-roll off a messenger in cash money, and slugs the messenger around somewhat for not holding still.

Furthermore, the Bankers' Association is willing to pay good dough to talk to Big Jule out in Kansas City, Mo., where a jug is knocked by a stranger, and in the confusion the paying teller, and the cashier, and the second vice-president are clouted about, and the day-watchman is hurt, and two coppers are badly bruised, and over fifteen G's is removed from the counters and never returned.

Then there is something about a department store in Canton, O., and a flour mill safe in Toledo, and a grocery in Spokane, Wash., and a branch post office in San Francisco, and also something about a shooting match in Chicago, but of course this does not count so much, as only one party is fatally injured.

However, you can see that Big Jule is really very hot, what with the coppers all over the country looking for him high and low. In fact, he is practically on fire.

Of course I do not believe Big Jule does all the things the coppers say, because coppers always blame everything, no matter where it happens, on the most prominent guy they can think of, and Big Jule is quite prominent all over the U.S.A. The chances are he does do more than half these things, and he probably has a good alibi for the half he does do, at that, but he is certainly hot, and I do not care to have hot guys around me, or even guys who are only just a little bit warm.

TO-MORROW'S STORY

To-morrow's story will be "The Wisdom Of Phalaraz," by Morland Greig

But naturally I am not going to say this to Big Jule when he pops in on me, because he may think I am inhospitable, and I do not care to have such a rap going around and about on me, and furthermore Jule may become indignant if he thinks I am inhospitable, and knock me on my potato, because Big Jule is quick to take offence.

So I say hello to Big Jule, very pleasant and ask him to have a chair by the window where he can see the citizens walking to and fro down in Eighth-avenue and watch the circus wagons moving into Madison-square Garden by the way of the Forty-ninth-street side, for the circus always shows in the Garden in spring before going out on the road.

It is a little warm, and Big Jule takes off his coat, and I can see he has one automatic slung under his arm, and another sticking down in the waistband of his pants, and I hope and trust that no copper steps into the room while Big Jule is there, because it is very much against the law for guys to go around rodded up this way in New York City.

"Well, Jule," I say, "this is indeed a very large surprise to me, and I am glad to see you, but I am thinking maybe it is very foolish for you to be popping into New York just now, what with all the heat around here, and the coppers looking to arrest people for very little."

"I know," Jule says. "I know. But they do not have so very much on me around here, no matter what people say, and a guy gets homesick for his old hometown, especially a guy who is stuck away where I am for the past few months. I get homesick for the lights and the crowds on Broadway, and for the old neighbourhood. Furthermore, I wish to see my Maw. I hear she is sick and may not live, and I wish to see her before she goes."

Well, naturally, anybody will wish to see their Maw under such circumstances, but Big Jule's Maw lives over in West Forty-ninth Street near Eleventh Avenue, and she is lying in the very same time block but Johnny Brannigan, the strong arm copper, and it is a hand-drawn to one of Big Jule's goons nearby around his old neighbourhood, Johnny Brannigan will hear of it, and if there is one guy Johnny Brannigan does not care for, it is Big Jule, although they are like kites together.

But it seems that even when they are kids they, back very little me

STUDENT ALLOWED $25 BAIL

Tried To Cross Harbour Without Ticket

Another case of attempting to cross the harbour on the Yau-mat Ferry without paying the fare was brought before Mr. E. I. Wynne Jones at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning when Chan Kai-ming, an 18-year-old student was charged with attempting to cross yesterday.

A. S. Dierks, Ticket Inspector of the Ferry Company, stated that defendant ran past the first-class barrier and had to be called three times before he returned. On being asked if he had a ticket, he replied in the affirmative and after feeling in his pocket he said that he had left it at home. It was later found that he did not have a ticket.

The case was remanded for one week, defendant being allowed bail of $25.

Three cases of diphtheria, two cases of typhoid fever, and one case of meningitis were reported in the Colony during the 48 hours ended Sunday.

So I speak of Johnny living in the same block with Big Jule's Maw, for Big Jule, but it only makes him mad.

Bucharest, To-day.

The recent steps of the Austrian Government on the Hapsburg question are declared here to be the prime reason for the visit of Prince Paul, Yugoslavian Regent, arranged to take place this week-end. Prince Paul will stay at Sinaia Palace for several days as the guest of King Carol.

M. Titulescu, Rumanian Premier, will interrupt his mission abroad to return to Bucharest to be present at the royal deliberations, when he will report on the results of his informational trip to London and Paris.

Officially no statement is being made yet about Prince Paul's plans. — Trans-Ocean Service.

DIAMOND CASE IN SHANGHAI

A message dated June 25 stated that diamonds valued at approximately $300,000 were brought into His Majesty's Police Court that morning as evidence in a case against J. B. Ipekjian, H. M. Gregory and F. E. Gabbott, brought by the Maritime Customs. The charge was smuggling. The gems were seized in a raid on the Chinese Diamond Company in the French Concession.

BRADDOCK WINS

remarking: "So you're the guy who kills guys in the ring. Well, just get away from here now. We don't want to listen to any campaign speeches from you."

Fight Averted

Mike Cantwell, Baer's former trainer, who, on being dismissed from Baer's outfit, joined Braddock's camp, then stepped up menacingly to Baer and said: "I guess you know who I am, don't you?"

Cantwell looked as if he was about to swing a right to Baer's head when Gen. Phelan, an official of the New York State Athletic Commission, intervened.

Baer "Through"

Following the fight, in which the 5 to 1 favourite Max Baer was outpointed, the former champion said: "If you ever see me pull on another glove, I'll buy you a steam yacht." But no one believes that Max can afford to retire.

Jimmie Johnston, the Madison Gardens match-maker, who appeared at the ringside wearing a grey coat, light blue trousers, a blue shirt, and a bright yellow tie, says: "Don't forget that Baer is still a great fighter. He has a future in the ring if he wishes."

BATTLE OF STYMIES IN £750 GOLF

Remarkable Tie

There were splendid matches and unexpected results in the third round. Reginald Whitcombe, the only one of a successful trio of brothers who has failed to win this event, went down to Green; Alliss beat a fellow Ryder Cup player, W. H. Davies, and Easterbrook won from J. Bussan, the match play champion, in a remarkable tie.

Both players in this match will now probably advocate the abolition of the stymie. Easterbrook half-stymied at the second hole won the first four holes of the match in unbeatable bridges and an eagle. He was stymied again at the 6th, 7th, and 9th holes, and lost the first two but won the 9th.

Another Stymie

Out in 32 Easterbrook was three up, but Bussan won the 10th, and having lost the 13th to an eagle three, reduced his deficit again at the 14th, which Easterbrook played badly.

A stymie, the fifth of the match, turned the issue at the 15th. Easterbrook played it badly, but when he should have lost the hole he stymied Bussan and retained his two-holes lead.

Green holed three long putts to turn the issue in his match against R. A. Whitcombe, but Whitcombe hit too many inaccurate shots to make much of a fight of it. Green held the lead all the way round, and won at the 17th.

It was a similar story about Alliss. He is one of the most dangerous players in the country, when putting well, and he has seldom putted better than against Davies, who held his opponent through the green but could not match him in holing out.

15 JAPANESE STUDENTS LEAVE FOR OLYMPIAD

Two Pole Vaulters

There are two pole vaulters on the team: Shunichi Nishida and Hideo Oe, both of whom have done 420 meters. The outstanding sprinter is Mitsuo Taniuchi, who has up marks of 10.4 sec. in the 100 meters and 21.2 sec. in the 200 meters event.

The first stop of the team will be in Dairen on July 7, when it meets with "Manchukuo's" select athletes. Two days later the team will hold another meet in Changchung. Crossing Soviet Russia the 15 athletes will make their first stop in Helsingfors, where they will remain for more than a fortnight, facing their strength and skill against Finland's best athletes.

The Budapest Olympiad will begin on August 12 and will last five days. Following the games the Japanese sportsmen will participate in meets in Berlin, Paris and Zurich. Butterfield and Swire leave here on September 20.

The Hottest Guy In The World

"I am not afraid of Johnny Brannigan," he says. "In fact," he says, "I am thinking for some time lately that maybe I will clip Johnny Brannigan good while-I am here. I owe Johnny Brannigan a clipping. But I wish to see my Maw first, and then I will go around and see Miss Kitty Clancy. I guess maybe she will be much surprised to see me, and no doubt very glad."

Well, I figure it is a sure thing Miss Kitty Clancy will be surprised to see Big Jule, but I am not so sure about her being glad, because very often when a guy is away from a doll for a year or more, no matter how ever-loving she may be, she may get to thinking of someone else, for this is the way dolls are, whether they live on Eleventh Avenue or over on the Park.

Still I remember hearing that this Miss Kitty Clancy once thinks very well of Big Jule, although her old man, Jack Clancy, who runs a speakeasy, always claims it is a big knock to the Clancy family to have such a character as Big Jule hanging around.

"I often think of Miss Kitty Clancy the past year or so," Big Jule says, as he sits there by the window, watching the circus wagons and the crowds. "I especially think of her the past few months. In fact," he says, "thinking of Miss Kitty Clancy is about all I have to do where I am at, which is in an old warehouse on the Bay of Fundy outside of a town that is called St. Johns, or some such, up in Canada, and thinking of Miss Kitty Clancy all this time, I find out I love her very much indeed."

"I go to this warehouse," Big Jule says, "after somebody takes a jewellery store in the town, and the coppers start in blaming me. This warehouse is not such a place as I will choose myself if I am doing the choosing, because it is an old fur warehouse, and full of strange smells, but in the excitement around the jewellery store somebody puts a slug in my hip, and Leon Pierre carries me to the old warehouse, and there I am until I get well."

"It is very lonesome," Big Jule says. "In fact, you will be surprised how lonesome it is, and it is very, very cold, and all I have for company is a lot of rats. Personally, I never care for rats under any circumstances because they carry disease germs, and are apt to bite a guy when he is asleep, if they are hungry, which is what these rats try to do to me."

"The warehouse is away off by itself," Jule says, "and nobody ever comes around there except Leon Pierre to bring me grub and dress my hip, and at night it is very still, and all you can hear is the wind howling around outside and the rats running here and there. Some of them are very, very large rats. In fact, some of them seem about the size of rabbits, and they are pretty fresh, at that."

"At first I am willing to make friends with these rats, but they seem very hostile, and after they take a few nips at me, I can see there is no use trying to be nice to them, so I have Leon Pierre bring me a lot of ammunition for my rods every day and I practise shooting at the rats."

"The warehouse is so far off there is no danger of anybody hearing the shooting," Big Jule says, "and it helps me pass the time away. I get so I can hit a rat sitting, or running, or even flying through the air, because these warehouse rats often leap from place to place like mountain sheep, their idea being generally to take a good nip at me as they fly past."

"Well, sir," Jule says, "I keep score on myself one day, and I hit fifty rats hand running, without a miss, which I claim makes me the champion rat shooter of the world with a 45 automatic, although, of course," he says, "if anybody wishes to challenge me to a rat-shooting match I am willing to take them on for a side bet. I get so I can call my shots on the rats, and in fact several times I say to myself, 'I will hit this one in the right eye, and this one in the left eye, and it always turns out just as I say, although sometimes when you hit a rat with a 45 up close it is not always possible to tell afterwards just where you hit him, because you seem to hit him all over."

"By and by," Jule says, "I seem to discourage the rats somewhat, and they get so they play the chill for me, and do not try to nab me even when I am asleep. They find out that no rat dares poke his whiskers out at me or he will get a very close shave. So I have to look around for other amusement, but there is not much doing in such a place, although I finally find a bunch of doctors' books which turn out to be very interesting reading."

"It seems these books are left there by some croaker who retires there to think things over after experimenting on his ever-loving wife with a knife. In fact, it seems he cuts his ever-loving wife's head off, and she does not continue living; so he takes his books and goes to the warehouse and remains there until the law finds him, and hangs him up very high, indeed."

"Well, the books are a great comfort to me, and I learn many astonishing things about surgery, but after I read all the books there is nothing for me to do but think, and what I think about is Miss Kitty Clancy, and how much pleasure we have together walking around and about and seeing movie shows, and all this and that, until her old man gets so tough with me. Yes, I will be very glad to see Miss Kitty Clancy, and the old neighbourhood, and my Maw again."

Well, finally nothing will do Big Jule but he must take a stroll over into his old neighbourhood, and see if he cannot see Miss Kitty Clancy, and also drop in on his Maw, and he asks me to go along with him. I can think of a million things I will rather do than take a stroll with Big Jule, but I do not wish him to think I am snobbish, because as I say, Big Jule is quick to take offence. Furthermore, I figure that at such an hour of the day he is less likely to run into Johnny Brannigan or any other coppers who know him than at any other time, so I say I will go with him, but as we start out, Big Jule puts on his rods.

"Jule," I say, "do not take any rods with you on a stroll, because somebody may happen to see them, such as a copper, and you know they will pick you up for carrying a rod in this town quicker than you can say Jack Robinson, whether they know who you are or not. You know the Sullivan law is very strong against guys carrying rods in this town."

But Big Jule says he is afraid he will catch cold if he goes out without his rods, so we go down into Forty-ninth Street and start west toward Madison Square Garden and just as we reach Eighth Avenue and are standing there waiting for the traffic to stop, so we can cross the street, I see there is quite some excitement around the Garden on the Forty-ninth Street side, with people running every which way, and yelling no little, and looking up in the air.

So I look up myself, and what do I see sitting up there on the edge of the Garden roof but a big ugly-faced monkey. At first I do not recognise it as a monkey, because it is so big I figure maybe it is just one of the prize-fight managers who stand around on this side of the Garden all afternoon waiting to get a match for their fighters, and while I am somewhat astonished to see a prize-fight manager in such a position, I figure maybe he is doing it on a bet. But when I take a second look I see that it is indeed a big monkey, and an exceptionally homely monkey at that, though personally I never see any monkeys I consider so very handsome, anyway.

Well, this big monkey is holding something in its arms, and what it is I am not able to make out at first, but then Big Jule and I cross the street to the side opposite the Garden, and now I can see that the monkey has a baby in its arms. Naturally I figure it is some kind of advertising dodge put on by the Garden to lull the crowd, or maybe the fight between Sharkey and Biko, which is coming off after the circus, but guys are still yelling and running up and down, and dolls are screaming until finally I realize that a most surprising situation prevails.

It seems that the big monk up on the roof is nobody but Bongo, who is a gorilla belonging to the circus, and one of the very few gorillas of any account in this country, or anywhere else, as far as this goes, because good gorillas are very scarce indeed.

Well, it seems that while they are shoving Bongo's cage into the Garden, the door becomes unfastened, and the first thing anybody knows out pops Bongo, and goes bounding along the street, where a lot of the neighbours' children are playing games on the sidewalk and a lot of mamas are sitting out in the sun, alongside baby buggies containing their young. This is a very common sight in side streets such as West Forty-ninth on nice days, and by no means unpleasant, if you like mamas and their young.

Now what does this Bongo do but reach into a baby buggy which a mamma is pushing past on the sidewalk on the Garden side of the street, and snatch out a baby, though what Bongo wants with this baby nobody knows to this day. It is a very young baby, and not such a baby as is fit to give a gorilla the size of Bongo any kind of struggle, so Bongo has no trouble whatever in handling it. Anyway, I always hear a gorilla will make a sucker out of a grown man in a battle, though I wish to say I never see a battle between a gorilla and a grown man. It ought to be a first-class drawing card, at that.

Well, naturally the baby's mamma puts up quite a squawk about Bongo grabbing her baby, because no mamma wishes her baby to keep company with a gorilla and this mamma starts in screaming very loud, and trying to take the baby away from Bongo, so what does Bongo do but run right up on the roof of the Garden by way of a big electric sign which hangs down on the Forty-ninth Street side.

And there old Bongo sits on the edge of the roof with the baby in his arms, and the baby is squalling quite some, and Bongo is making funny noises, and showing his teeth as the folks commence gathering in the street below.

There is a big guy in his shirt sleeves running through the crowd waving his hands, and trying to shush everybody, and saying "Quiet, please" over and over, but nobody pays any attention to him. I figure this guy has something to do with the circus, and maybe with Bongo too. A traffic copper takes a peek at the situation, and calls for the reserves from the Forty-seventh Street station, and somebody else sends for the fire truck down the street, and pretty soon cops are running from every direction, and the fire-engines are coming, and the big guy in his shirt sleeves is more excited than ever.

"Quiet, please," he says. "Everybody keep quiet, because if Bongo becomes disturbed by the noise he will throw the baby down in the street. He throws everything he gets his hands on," the guy says. "He acquires this habit from throwing coconuts back in his old home country. Let us get a life net, and if you all keep quiet we may be able to save the baby before Bongo starts heaving it like a coconut."

Well, Bongo is sitting up there on the edge of the roof about seven stories above the ground peeping down with the baby in his arms, and he is holding this baby just like a mamma would, but anybody can see that Bongo does not care for the row below, and once he lifts the baby high above his head as if to beam somebody with it.

I see Big Nig, the crap shooter, in the mob, and afterwards I hear he is around offering to lay 7 to 5 against the baby, but everybody is too excited to bet on such a proposition, although it is not a bad price at that.

I see one doll in the crowd on the sidewalk on the side of the street opposite the Garden who is standing perfectly still staring up at the monk and the baby with a strange expression on her face, and the way she is looking makes me take a second gander at her, and who is it but Miss Kitty Clancy. Her lips are moving as she stands there staring up, and something tells me Miss Kitty Clancy is saying prayers to herself because she is such a doll as will know how to say prayers on an occasion like this.

Big Jule sees her about the same time I do, and Big Jule steps up beside Miss Kitty Clancy, and says hello to her, and though it is over a year since Miss Kitty Clancy sees Big Jule she turns to him and speaks to him as if she is talking to him just a minute before. It is very strange indeed, the way Miss Kitty Clancy speaks to Big Jule, as if he has never been away at all.

"Do something, Jule," she says. "You are always the one to do something. Oh, please do something, Jule."

Well, Big Jule never answers a word, but steps back in the clear of the crowd and reaches for the waistband of his pants, when I grab him by the arm and say to him like this:

"My goodness, Jule," I say. "What are you going to do?" "Why," Jule says, "I am going to shoot this thieving monk before he takes a notion to heave the baby on somebody down here. For all I know," Jule says, "he may hit me with it, and I do not care to be hit with anybody's baby."

"Jule," I say, very earnestly, "do not pull a rod in front of all these coppers, because if you do they will nail you sure, if only for having the rod, and if you are nailed you are in a very tough spot indeed, what with being wanted here and there. Jule," I say, "you are hotter than a forty-five all over this country, and I do not wish to see you nailed. Anyway," I say, "you may shoot the baby instead of the monk, because anybody can see it will be very difficult to hit the monk up there without hitting the baby. Furthermore, even if you do hit the monk it will fall into the street, and bring the baby with it."

"You speak great foolishness," Jule says. "I never miss what I shoot at. I will shoot the monk right between the eyes, and this will make him fall backwards, not forwards, and the baby will not be hurt because anybody can see it is no fall at all from the ledge to the roof behind. I make a study of such propositions," Jule says, "and I know if a guy is in such a position as this monk sitting on a ledge looking down from a high spot, his defensive reflexes, tend backwards, so this is the way he is bound to fall if anything unexpected comes up on him such as a bullet between the eyes. I read all about it in the doctor's books."

Then all of a sudden up comes his hand, and in his hand is one of his rods, and I hear a sound like ker-bop. When I come to think about it afterwards I do not remember Big Jule even taking aim like a guy will generally do if he is shooting at something sitting, but old Bongo seems to lift up a little bit off the ledge at the crack of the gun, and then he heels over backwards, the baby still in his arms, and squalling more than somewhat, and Big Jule says to me like this:

"Right between the eyes, and I will bet on it," he says, "although it is not much of a target," at that. Well, nobody can figure what happens for a minute, and there is much silence except from the guy in his shirt-sleeves who is expressing much indignation with Big Jule and saying the circus people will sue him for damages sure if he has hurt Bongo, because the monk is worth 100,000 dollars or some such. I see Miss Kitty Clancy kneeling on the sidewalk with her hands clasped, and looking upwards, and Big Jule is sticking his rod back in his waistband again.

By this time some guys are out on the roof getting through from the inside of the building with the idea of heading Bongo off from that direction, and they let out a yell, and pretty soon I see one of them holding the baby up so every one in the street can see it. A couple of other guys get down near the edge of the roof and pick up Bongo and show him to the crowd, as dead as a mackerel, and one of the guys put a finger between Bongo's eyes to show where the bullet hits the monk, and Miss Kitty Clancy walks over to Big Jule and tries to say something to him, but only busts out crying very loud.

Well, I figure this is a good time for Big Jule and me to take a walk, because everybody is interested in what is going on up on the roof, and I do not wish the circus people to get a chance to serve a summons in a damage suit on Big Jule for shooting the valuable monk. Furthermore, a couple of coppers in harness are looking Big Jule over very critically, and I figure they are apt to put the old sleeve on Jule any second.

All of a sudden a slim young guy steps up to Big Jule and says to him like this:

"Jule," he says, "I want to see you, and who is it but Johnny Brannigan. Naturally Big Jule starts reaching for a rod, but Johnny starts him walking down the street so fast Big Jule does not have time to get in action just then.

"No use getting it out, Jule," Johnny Brannigan says. "No use, lift up a little bit off the ledge at the crack of the gun, and then he heels over backwards, the baby still in his arms, and squalling more than somewhat, and Big Jule says to me like this:

SEQUEL TO COLLISION IN HARBOUR

tons, while the Afrika was a vessel of 3,500 tons. Their respective lengths were 535 feet and 455 feet.

UNABLE TO BERTH Both ships had entered the Harbour by way of Lyemooon Pass. At first the Jefferson was behind the Afrika, but, as her speed was greater, she soon overhauled that vessel and it was in this formation that they passed up the Harbour. The President boat was bound for the No. 1 Kowloon Wharf while the Afrika was proceeding to her anchorage at Buoy No. A.4. When the Jefferson was passing Holt's wharf it became apparent to those in charge that she would not be able to berth at the wharf as had been originally expected. This was confirmed when a launch from the wharf company came alongside. The Jefferson then endeavoured to follow the usual custom and anchor in the neighbourhood of the wharf.

The Afrika was heavily laden and there was not much water between her keel and the harbour bed but the steering was in perfect order. "She ought to have known," Mr. Jenkin went on, "that the President Jefferson could not berth at the wharf and would consequently have to drop anchor. If the Afrika had kept to the south of Buoy A.6 there would have been no collision."

Mr. Jenkin continued by saying that it was the duty of the captain of the Afrika and the pilot on board that ship to keep a good look out for any signals on board the Jefferson to see if there was any possibility of the latter ship taking any other course than going to the wharf.

POINTS SUBMITTED He then submitted the following points: "The system of signalling, cancelling or delaying a berth; that in fact these signals were flown on that day; that dredging operations were proceeding and that there was a dolphin in the water next to their wharf; and that in consequence the place of anchorage would be somewhere in the waters in which the Afrika intended to manoeuvre."

The next point that Mr. Jenkin dealt with was the relative positions of the two vessels when the Jefferson's anchor was dropped. Mr. Jenkin submitted that the President Jefferson was two or three ship's lengths from buoy A.7, and at that time the Afrika had passed the Kowloon Ferry pier heading for Buoy No. 4.

"If this court finds that the President Jefferson dropped her anchor at the point her captain says she did, and if this court finds that the Afrika was south of the

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL

Danzig, To-day. The "Federation of National Officials" and the Danzig branch of the "International Bible Researchers" have been dissolved by order of the chief of police. Both organisations proved to have been engaged in subversive propaganda. A law suit conducted a few days ago before the Danzig Courts revealed that the so-called "earnest Bible researchers" were really Communists, whose aim was to overthrow the present Government. The "Federation of National Officials" was composed of decidedly reactionary elements who, though in the service of the Government, were working to undermine its authority.—Trans-Ocean Service.

MILITARY PARLEYS IN CANTON

Kowloon Ferry pier, then this case is at an end, for it is common ground then that the captain of the President Jefferson was right in what he did."

WHERE COLLISION OCCURRED Dealing with the point at which the collision had occurred Mr. Jenkin stated that it was asserted by the Jefferson that it was about 400 feet north-east of Buoy No. 7, while those on the Afrika alleged that the point was somewhere in the region of 200 feet north-north-east of Buoy No. 7.

With reference to the statement by those in charge of the Afrika that they had been creeping up on the Jefferson all the time, and also dealing with the fact that the President Jefferson had previously overtaken the Afrika, Mr. Jenkin quoted a well-known principle of the international shipping convention. This principle states that when a ship is overtaking a ship and then the position is reversed and the slower ship speeds up and proceeds to pass the original overtaking ship, then she is required to keep out of the way of the ship ahead. In this case it was the duty of the Afrika, as she was overtaking on her own admission, the President Jefferson, to keep out of the way of that vessel.

The Afrika deliberately tried to cut in between Buoy A.7 and (Cont. at foot of Col. 6 and 7) the President Jefferson so interfering with the manoeuvring of that vessel. The Afrika was a dumb ship inasmuch as she used neither her rudder, engines, nor anchor. Although the Afrika had blown two blasts signifying that she was going to port, she did not go in that direction at all. RELEVANT ARGUMENT In putting his case before the court, Mr. Eldon Potter said that it was a very simple case, which had involved a lot of argument which was entirely irrelevant. The President Jefferson had blown three short blasts when she had dropped her anchor, a signal which to all mariners meant that she was proceeding full speed astern. The reason why she had not proceeded at stage until this afternoon, term was because she had to clear the dolphin first and the only way she could do that was by going slightly ahead. The captain of the Afrika, Mr. Potter continued, could hardly be expected to navigate the President Jefferson in addition to his own ship. It was not for him to say "Ah, the Jefferson has signalled that she is going astern, but she won't be able to do it, because the dolphin is in the way." His duty was to follow the signals he received and proceed on his course. Mr. Potter submitted that the captain of the President Jefferson had forgotten all about the three blasts he had given. The case was adjourned at this stage until this afternoon.
